the above named occasion Tuesday night, says:

Three years ago the Republican Club undertook to stimulate the movement in favor dit making the sortiversary of Lincoln's pirth a National legal holiday. It sought to do this by holding its annual dinner an trait day, and trying, by example, to get other party organizations to do the same.

The dinner last night was hold, as usual, at Delmonkola. The attendance was so large as to make necessary the use of an annex soom. The Vice-President-elect, Mr. Morbon, was among the guests. He came at 6 o'clock and remained there for about at hour. Then be had to go away to keep another engagement. The diningroom was decorated with fiags, banbers, shields, and golden eagles. Marshall's picture of Lincoln, which had been framed for the eccasion by the artist, was imag near the speaker's table. The music was confined chiefly to the most popular American lire; and was accompaned fragessely by the most enthulsated singing on the part of the hundred or more greets.
